PRODUCE SAFETY INSPECTIONS, TRAINING ROLL FORWARD

OUTREACH TEAM TEACHING ONLINE DURING PANDEMIC

BY EVA MOORE

The COVID-19 pandemic put a temporary halt to farm inspections, but the South Carolina Department of Agriculture has now resumed farm inspections under the Produce Safety Rule of the Food Safety Modernization Act – and that means it’s more important than ever that someone on your produce farm undergoes food safety training.

Passed in 2011, the Food Safety Modernization Act’s Produce Safety Rule sets federal regulatory standards for the production, harvest, and handling of fruits and vegetables in an effort to prevent microbial contamination and reduce foodborne illnesses associated with fresh produce. One requirement of FSMA is that at least one supervisor or responsible party at the farm complete an FDA-recognized produce safety training.

SCDA’s Produce Safety outreach team has been conducting grower trainings since 2017, training nearly 400 people around the state, but during the pandemic they’ve had to move their training online.

These remote trainings have been positive and successful, says Brooke Horton, outreach coordinator for SCDA Produce Safety: Working with Clemson Extension and Carolina Farm Stewardship Association, the Produce Safety team has trained 56 people since May. But she acknowledges there are some downsides to online training.

“While the virtual trainings have been convenient for lots of farmers, we also realize that many of the farms in our state do not have the necessary technology and internet connection to complete these remote trainings,” says Horton. “This limits the number of growers that are able to participate. Also, holding these trainings remotely is just not quite the same as interacting in person. We miss the in-person networking and interaction between growers and our trainers and look forward to the day when we can resume in-person trainings.”

During the eight-hour trainings (currently being held over two consecutive afternoons), growers learn a wealth of information. Topics include:

- Worker Health, Hygiene, and Training
- Soil Amendments
- Wildlife, Domesticated Animals, and Land Use
- Agricultural Water (Production Water; Postharvest Water)
- Postharvest Handling and Sanitation
- How to Develop a Farm Food Safety Plan

Participants will learn about microorganisms relevant to produce safety and how to reduce the risk of microbial contamination, as well as best practices for traceability.

“Since the beginning of Produce Safety grower trainings in 2017, we have had a countless number of produce growers comment on how much information they receive from the course for such a small registration fee,” Horton says. “They do not typically come in expecting so much helpful information from a one-day course.”

COMMISSIONER’S CORNER

HUGH E. WEATHERS

SOUTH CAROLINA
COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE

THE POWERFUL PEE DEE

I spoke to the Greater Florence Chamber of Commerce last week at their annual Economic Outlook Luncheon, and it was a good opportunity to reflect on just how important the Pee Dee region is to South Carolina agribusiness. As of the last Census of Agriculture, the 12 counties that make up the Pee Dee produced nearly $1 billion in agricultural products each year.

Over my career as Commissioner and before, I have had the privilege of knowing some great agricultural leaders from that part of state. They played a part in preparing me for the responsibilities of this office. Many years ago, Congressman Ed Young was a dairy farmer and colleague of my father. Laurie Lawson was a true gentleman, farmer, and leader for South Carolina agriculture. And the Flowers family, which has had a significant role in my career in agriculture, is exemplary of the friends who have made big impacts on agriculture in the Pee Dee.

The region used to be known for growing tobacco, of course. But while tobacco’s importance has waned, the Pee Dee has continued as a powerhouse region for commodities like peanuts, soybean, cotton, and pork. Agribusinesses like McCall Farms and SOPAKCO are crucial to the region’s economy, too, employing thousands of people and buying products from local farmers. We see lots of agricultural innovation in the Pee Dee, too. For example, Woodard Farms grows cotton and sells blankets made from it under the label Covered In Cotton – an exciting instance of keeping the supply chain here in South Carolina. We gave their company a grant last year through our Agribusiness Center for Research and Entrepreneurship.

The Pee Dee was hit hard by flooding in 2015 and Hurricane Matthew in 2016, but in the past few years they’ve bounced back, and the state is the better for it.

Hard to believe it’s already September, isn’t it? If you haven’t done so yet, I urge you to take some time to make an emergency plan for your farm and family. This Atlantic hurricane season has been very active so far. Some South Carolina farmers have suffered some wind damage and wet fields, but we’ve been fortunate enough to avoid a direct hit. I hope it stays that way, but it never hurts to be prepared.

Hurricane planning can include packing an emergency kit, securing important documents, making sure your family and workers know what to do in case of an emergency, making arrangements for your pets and farm animals, and learning your evacuation routes. Visit scemd.org to read the 2020 South Carolina Hurricane Guide and lots more preparedness information.

FIRST SIGHTING OF BLACK AND WHITE TEGU LIZARD CONFIRMED IN MIDLANDS

BY SOUTH CAROLINA DEPARTMENT OF NATURAL RESOURCES • PHOTOS BY DUSTIN SMITH

South Carolina has documented its first black and white tegu lizard, a species popular in the pet trade, in Lexington after a SCDNR social media post in May informed the public about the non-native lizard already established in both Georgia and Florida, likely as a result of release or escape.

SCDNR staff have been monitoring the situation closely and have received multiple reports since May from Lexington and Aiken counties. No previous reports could be confirmed.

The individual removed from Lexington County was an adult female measuring about 2.5 feet long; however, black and white tegu lizards can reach up to 4 feet in length and weigh more than 10 pounds as adults. Tegus are voracious omnivorous lizards that eat a variety of prey, including birds, small mammals, reptiles and amphibians, fruits, vegetables, insects, and eggs.

"The introduction of any non-native species can have serious negative impacts on native wildlife. Black and white tegus are no exception," said SCDNR herpetologist Andrew Grosse, "Tegus mature and reproduce quickly, though most concerning may be their preference for eggs and the potential impacts to our native ground-nesting birds like turkey and quail, as well as other species such as the state-endangered gopher tortoise."

SCDNR asks people to report any sightings of black and white tegus in the wild to Andrew Grosse, grossea@dnr.sc.gov. If possible, please submit a photo, location, and time and date the individual was seen.

As a non-native species, tegus in the wild in South Carolina are not protected by state wildlife laws or regulations.

For more information about black and white tegus, including natural history and identifying characteristics, see georgiawildlife.com/tegu

NEW ONLINE ORDERING SYSTEM SENDS CLEMSON ICE CREAM NATIONWIDE

BY DENISE ATTAWAY, CLEMSON UNIVERSITY

CLEMSON — Clemson University ice cream holds sweet memories for Kathleen “Kat” Miller Vinson and now that she lives thousands of miles away, a new online ordering system allows her to continue making memories.

Vinson graduated from Clemson in 1981 with a degree in English. She now lives in Albuquerque, New Mexico, and recently ordered ice cream, including her favorite – Double Cookies and Cream – using the new Clemson ice cream online ordering system. Vinson sees the new system as a way to connect with and support the university.

“This new online ordering system is very easy to use,” Vinson said. “As a proud Clemson alumna, I wanted to support the ’55 Exchange during this COVID-19 pandemic. Even though I now live almost 2,000 miles away from Clemson, I felt this was a way that I could help Clemson students and faculty.”

The online ordering system Vinson refers to was created during the spring semester. This system allows Clemson ice cream to be shipped directly to customers nationwide. Orders can be placed online at clemson.edu/icecream. On the webpage, click on the order link just below the banner that goes to the CUMarketplace ordering system.

Money raised from the sale of ice cream supports the ’55 Exchange, the student-run business on campus where Clemson ice cream and other dairy products are sold. Just like many other small businesses, the ’55 Exchange has taken a big financial hit from forced closure due to COVID-19. The students are hoping to recoup some of their losses.

“We operate just like any other small business, including paying rent to the university, as well as paying our student and professional staff,” said Amy Grace Funcik, a Clemson Food, Nutrition and Packaging Sciences student from the Isle of Palms. “We entered the shutdown with a strong balance sheet, but with no means to generate sales, our financial strength has been severely impacted, placing the ’55 Exchange business future in jeopardy. So, we are looking for members of the Clemson Family to help us promote the launch of our ice cream shipping program.”

The students’ goal is to fill at least 100 orders per month, said Johnny McGregor, professor and ’55 Exchange advisor.

“We are currently running at about 50 orders per month so we need to double our number of orders before we can meet our financial goals,” McGregor said.

Changes are coming to the ordering system that McGregor said are sure to please.

“These changes include the ability for people to select their favorite flavors,” he said. “Right now, we are limited to offering preselected flavors that we ship out the second week of every month.”

Anyone interested in helping promote ’55 Exchange programs can email Funcik at afuncik@g.clemson.edu.

In addition to online ordering, hand packed pints of Clemson ice cream also are available from 3–6 p.m. on Thursdays at the Clemson Farmers Market in Patrick Square. Online purchases are encouraged to help maintain social distancing, but cash also will be accepted. Online purchases for pickup at the Clemson Farmer’s Market can be made at clemson.edu/icecream. Available flavors are posted on the ’55 Exchange’s Facebook and Instagram pages each Thursday morning – facebook.com/55exchange and instagram.com/clemsonicecream.

Although Vinson now lives miles away, memories she made of Clemson ice cream while growing up here are as vivid today as they were when they happened.

“When I was around 5 years old, I was doing a little dance performance at the Clemson House,” Vinson said. “After the performance, my dance teacher took me to get Clemson ice cream. I ordered chocolate and she ordered lime sherbet. She let me taste her lime sherbet and I just about ate all of it! A couple of years later, my parents started taking my sisters and me to get ice cream on Sunday afternoons. Such great memories!”

Vinson’s parents also enjoyed eating Clemson ice cream. Her father’s favorite flavor was vanilla, “but I must say he loved Clemson Bleu Cheese more than anything else,” Vinson said. Her mother’s favorite flavor was peach and Vinson said she would take her mother “a pint or two” whenever she visited her in Clemson. Vinson’s daughter, Garland Kathleen Vinson, begins her sophomore year as criminal justice major at Clemson this fall. Her favorite flavor is mint chocolate chip.

ZOYSIA GRASSES ARE GAINING POPULARITY FOR NEW AND REPLACEMENT LAWNS

Zoysia grass has long been admired for producing beautiful and lush lawns. Recent technology, research, and development have led to many new varieties that are shade tolerant and drought resistant. Zoysia overall is traffic tolerant and weed-, disease- and insect-resistant due to its density.

Originating from East Asia and the Pacific Islands, zoysia (pronounced ZOY-shuh) was introduced to the United States between 1892 and 1895. It has since had a huge impact on the US turfgrass industry, with roughly 50 cultivars that have been developed over the years. There are three principal species used for turf: Zoysia japonica, Zoysia matrella, and Zoysia tenuifolia, all from the Poaceae family.

Drought resistance is all important in today’s world as water conservation has become a necessity. El Toro, Empire, Jamur, Palisades, and De Anza were all developed to be able to survive and thrive on less water yet still provide beautiful turf. Shade tolerance is very necessary to mature properties with larger trees and shrubbery included in the landscape. Palisades, Cavalier, Zorro, Diamond, and De Anza are the answers to shade issues.

Zoysia is now being used to replace St. Augustine grass in many cases. St. Augustine has been a popular grass for US lawns since the late 1800s. It is a warm season grass and thrives in heat but lacks winter hardiness. It is found from the Carolinas to Florida, west of the Gulf Coast to Texas and in Southern and Central California. It has a wide blade, is not drought and traffic tolerant, and is very susceptible to chinch bugs, a small insect pest that can damage lawns.

Disease does occur on occasion, and brown patch is probably the most prevalent in zoysia. This common fungus occurs during the growing season and has the ability to spread quickly if left untreated. Identifying brown patch is fairly easy: A brown ring appears, encircling a green center. Headway is a recommended fungicide for the treatment of this disease, as it has a longer residual than most other fungicides. The best time to water is early in the morning to help save water and limit foliar disease problems. Watering during the hot afternoon loses a large quantity of water to evaporation, and watering at night encourages disease because the foliage stays wet all night.

Experts recommend giving a zoysia lawn 1/2 to 1 inch of water per week. To measure how much water you get per hour, set a tin can by several of the sprinkler heads then measure what collects in the can over the hour. It takes three to four hours to apply 1 inch of water, which requires about 600 gallons per 1,000 square feet. Each watering time should penetrate the soil 6 to 8 inches, so one good time is better than several short watering times.

Thatch buildup is a common problem and is caused by undecomposed organic matter forming just above the soil line. Limit the amount of fertilizer used – 2.5 to 5 pounds per 1,000 square feet is the usual recommendation per growing season. 24-2-11 (Nitrogen-Phosphorus-Potash) is a very good fertilizer for zoysia grass. Some lawn services offer dethatching and most rental shops have machines for the DIYer. Electric machines do a fair job; they are lighter and easier to handle but take longer to complete the job. The thatch needs removing every 2 or 3 years. Bagging grass clippings when mowing is always recommended.

Recommended mowing heights range from 0.75 to 2.5 inches depending on the cultivar. A pre-emergent herbicide should also be used in late February or early March, and some also prefer a fall application.
